ROTC back on campus

BY JOSEPH PLESS
Lions' Pride Staff Writer

For the first time since 2003, ROTC classes will be offered on campus.

Saint Leo, like all land-grant schools was originally a military school. Young men would attend drill instruction and undergo inspections along side their regular class schedules. That tradition continues today with our country's wide range of educational opportunities for the armed forces, such as the campuses located on military bases and online classes made available to soldiers.

One of these choices is the Army Reserve Officer Training Corps, or Army ROTC. This program, taught by members of the US Army and run by the students, or cadets, is a leadership development course. Many cadets receive scholarships of up to $25,000 a year, plus a stipend and book allowance.

In the past, cadets would have to travel to USF four times a week for instruction. Now with physical training (PT) and classes being held on campus at Saint Leo, members of the unit will save time and gas. The Suncoast Battalion, having repeatedly been one of the largest and top rated units, has received more money this year, enabling the hiring of more instructors and distribution of more scholarships.

Students, scholarships, and instructors are not the only thing changing for the Suncoast Battalion. The unit will soon be moving into a brand new, state-of-the-art Joint Military Leadership Center on the USF campus. This beautiful new structure will house all three units stationed at USF (Army, Navy, and Air Force) and will provide new classrooms, storage, and office space.

At Saint Leo, the Military Science I (MSI) class consists of only two cadets this semester. Cadet (CDT) Ashley Pennington from Winterhaven, who spent her four years of high school in an Army JROTC program, and CDT Joseph Pless of Dade City who spent four years in Pasco High's NJROTC program. Both are being taught by Major Kathleen Porter in the ROTC trailer.

Major Porter was sees a bright future for the Saint Leo detachment.

CDT Richard Santana, a senior who is majoring in psychology, leads the Saint Leo PT everyday during the week. CDT Brady Juelson is also a member of the Saint Leo lacrosse team.

CDT Patrick Quezada and CDT Andrew Kortises, who attend classes at Saint Leo's MacDill Air Force Base campus, along with CDT Santana are members of the Green to Gold program. The Green to Gold program is a process through which soldiers already enlisted can attend college and be commissioned upon graduation.

Campus Safety: Expanding the Arsenal

BY BRANDY SCAGLIONE
Lions' Pride Staff Photographer

Campus Safety is taking extra precautions this year to protect the students and keep the crime rate low.

Since the beginning of September, there have been five reported thefts on campus. Two thefts occurred in Roderick, one in Snyder Hall, one in Saint Francis, and the last reported theft was a license plate stolen in a parking lot.

None of the thefts were due to breaking and entering but, sadly, because the students left either their window or door unlocked.

Director of Campus Safety, Jerome Helton, stresses that students should keep their doors and windows locked at all times.

"Because our campus is so small and labeled as a private university, I feel students are a bit more relaxed about their safety here," said Helton. "But students should always feel the need to keep their doors locked and belongings close by."

"My electric guitar, my friend's computer, my Xbox 360, and about 30 DVDs were stolen. It sucks," he said. "The only reason we left the window cracked that night is because the air over here hasn't been working."

When asked about how campus security handled the situation, LaViola had nothing but good things to say.

"I mean, I don't think they have a lot of power. Basically, the white-haired guy apologized for what happened and asked if I wanted to call the cops. But, I knew he did what he could. Once the cops showed up, I filed the report and that was that. I just wish they had cameras over here in Roderick because now they have no real way to see what happened or who did it."

Helton sympathizes with the victims, but notes why the theft occurred.

"The reason these particular rooms were targeted is because they had something unlocked. The burglar saw this and knew that room was an easy target," she commented.

And, students aren't the only ones being targeted. Art instructor Karen Phillips, recently had her radio stolen from her classroom in the basement of Saint Francis Hall. Although it was eventually returned, Phillips has decided to keep it in the trunk of her car instead of inside the classroom.

In an effort to eliminate the risks of theft, Campus Safety has enacted the Lock-It or Loose-It campaign to encourage and remind students to keep their rooms locked.

"When an officer comes across an unlocked door on campus, the officer will lock it himself and leave the Lock-It or Lose-It form on the door," said Helton. "The student will then have to come to the Campus Safety office in order to get back

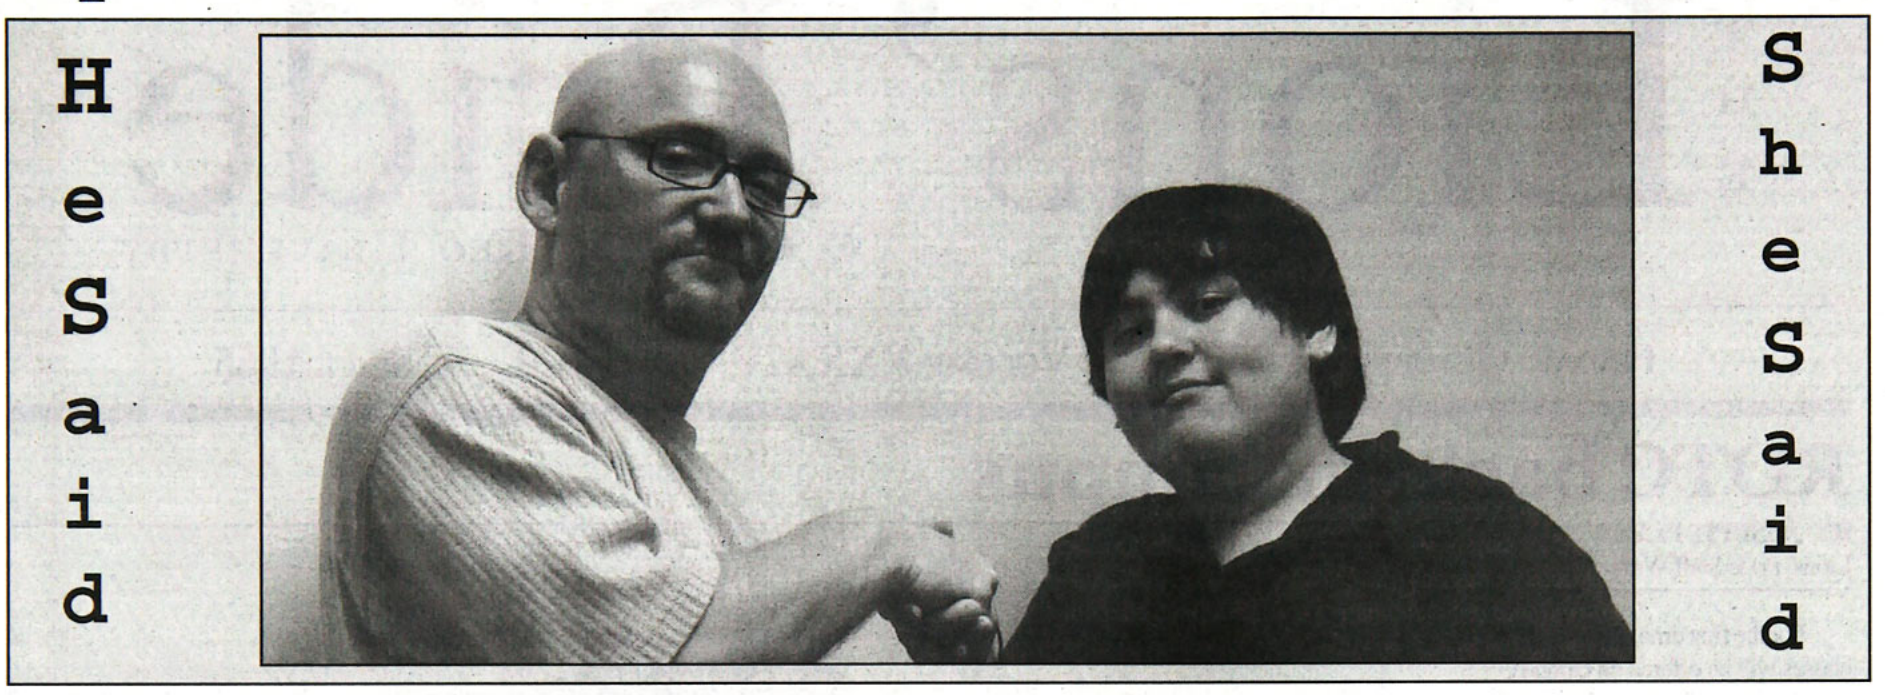
Opinions



Campus security begins with you

BY JOSHUA M. SMITH
Lions' Pride Online Editor

Ever prop an exterior door open? Ever leave your dorm room unlocked? Do you let unauthorized visitors in at all hours of the day and night? No? Then chances are you know someone who does. No big deal, right? After all, it's Campus Saftey's job to keep you and your possessions safe, right? Well, it may be their job, but they can't do it without students taking personal responsibility for the safety of themselves and their belongings. In reality, Campus Safety helps those who help themselves.

The responsibility for a safe and secure campus begins with you and me. Saint Leo's security staff cannot be in all places at all times. Though they do a fine job, they cannot do it on their own. That's why it is so important for each and every one of us to report suspicious activity or persons through the proper channels and to discourage violations of security guidelines by our fellow students and by ourselves.

It may seem like a good idea at the time to have a friend over to your dorm room, but doing so is a huge responsibility. When you open that door, you take the safety of every other resident into your own hands. How well do you know this person? Are you willing to take personal responsibility for whatever he does during his visit? These are things we all ought to think about, because giving a friend access to a residence hall does not simply invite him into our domiciles but into everyone else's as well.

Do you know anyone who leaves his dorm room door unlocked or open? Is that person you? Such behavior invites illegal activity. An open door leading to a room full of goodies is a temptation that many people—more than you know—will take advantage of. Really, it's simply the law of supply and demand. When the cookie jar is open and right in front of people, chances are they will stick their hand in. As the supply of free stuff goes up, the demand for (and theft of) that stuff goes up with it. In a way, we create thieves when we invite people to look into our rooms and covet our goods. Yes, the ultimate responsibility lies with the one who perpetrates the act, but, as any doctor will tell you, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

There is an ongoing debate in this country on whether individuals should be empowered to provide for their own security. Some even believe students should be allowed to carry handguns for their own protection. While that suggestion is still considered extreme, there are other ways students can and should protect themselves and their fellow students. Suspicious items, behavior, persons, and security violations should be reported to a resident assistant and/or to Campus Safety. If you cannot deter crime yourself, then start helping the resources we have become more effective by assuming the role of eyes and ears for them. Also, be sure you are following the security guidelines yourself; stop by Campus Safety and get some information, or find it on the web site. It's all right there to be found, and it exists for your benefit.

Ultimately, campus security begins with you and me. It's easy to point fingers when crime happens on campus, but the reality is it takes a village of responsible people to secure an entire campus. Each rule violation we cast a blind eye toward weakens the security of everyone on campus. When we allow unauthorized people access to restricted campus areas at restricted times, we don't just compromise our own security—we compromise that of our neighbors as well.

Before we go straight to blaming Campus Safety, the next time there is a theft on campus, let's ask ourselves if we did everything possible to stop that theft before it happened. In the end, campus security is the responsibility of us all.

Have no fear, security is here

BY KATIE GAISER

Although my partner, Josh, and I usually find a subject to disagree on, for this issue I've decided to provide a similar perspective to his on Campus Safety.

Since most students on this campus are quick to point the finger at security when something goes wrong, it would lead one to believe students know little about what security does for them. Therefore, it's time to let everyone know.

Recently, there's been a lot of talk about the thefts on campus. But what most students don't know is these thefts occurred because students left their windows and doors unlocked. Think about how many people walk past a dorm room on a daily basis. All it takes is one person to touch the door handle or window and realize it's unlocked. Security can't be there all the time, nor should they be. Students should either lock up, or expect to be robbed.

Now, say students still decide to leave their doors unlocked. Believe it or not, security still has them covered. According to Jerome Helton, head of Campus Safety, they have what is known as the Lock-it or Lose-it crime prevention notice. Security parols each building, checking dorm rooms, cars, and offices for anything that may have been left unlocked. If something is discovered, they leave a notice letting the owner know, and then they secure the unlocked door. This way, security is always keeping an eye out for potential crime.

And, they're doing a good job, because according to Helton, there have only been four reported thefts on campus in September, one of which was a license plate taken from a car. Think about how this number could be so much larger with all the people who leave their doors open and unlocked, inviting anyone to walk right in.

Furthermore, if all we really have to worry about at Saint Leo is our own classmates robbing us, aren't we in good shape? Should we really be complaining when most of these reported thefts could've been prevented?

And, security doesn't stop at unlocked automobiles and dorm rooms. They also have what's known as a FIR, Field Interrogation Report. If ever there is a suspicious car with no decal or suspicious person wandering the campus, security will immediately approach the car or person with a FIR and obtain their information. This information includes their name, driver's license, race, date of birth, and description, as well as the make, model, year, and tag number if the suspect is in a vehicle.

Campus Safety even provides its own handbook, which can easily be found on the Saint Leo website. This handbook, entitled Your Right to Know, lists everything from Campus Safety contact numbers, hotlines for rape victims and pregnancy support, contact information for other safety institutions, crime statistics from the last three years, and even a list of safety tips so students can protect themselves better.

So before students assume security isn't there for them, they should really look at the facts. On such a small campus, we should feel lucky to have a group of officers willing to protect us even if there isn't a whole lot going on. They're watching our backs, locking our doors, and keeping us safe from potentially dangerous people.

Residence life updates at Leo

BY ELIZABETH HARDY
Lions' Pride Staff Writer

Residence Life added a few new policies to be aware of.

Many students have expressed annoyance at the new policies and rules taking effect, but still others feel the precautions are necessary only for students' safety.

Saint Leo is dedicated to providing for the safety and well-being of its students. The following policies are an overview of changes that have come to Saint Leo this school year.

Signs across campus remind everyone that in accordance with Florida law, one must smoke at least 25 feet away from the entrance of any building. There are ashtrays provided for convenience, and so far, the policy has been upheld.

Living on campus is a privilege and not a right. The staff at Saint Leo work hard to keep students safe. For freshmen living in Marmion and Snyder, there are visitation hours in place for members of the opposite sex to visit one's dorm room. Sunday through Wednesday the curfew is 2 a.m. and Thursday through Saturday the curfew for the opposite sex is 3 a.m.

"The rule used to be referred to as the little black book, because students had to sign in when going to the opposite sexes side. Now we go by the honor system," said Marmion RA Nick Bliesner.

Last year, this rule was rebuked, and it has been reenacted for the class of 2011. While the policy may seem strict, Director of Resident Life, Kenneth Posner, said the rules are actually "more relaxed now than in years past."

Residence halls Beniot and Henderson have seen more strictly enforced rules this year as well. Students cannot get into these buildings after 12 a.m. if they are not residents because an I.D. entry system has been enacted.

"I suppose its safe, but if you forget your I.D. you're out of luck. I kind of don't like it because I feel like it kind of lessens our freedom at the same time," said sophomore Kerri Heasley.

It seems as if alcohol and college go hand in hand as almost a right of passage. With the consumption of alcohol come silly and usually harmless games being played. The prohibition of drinking games may appear to be a new policy, but it has been in effect for the last ten years.

While there are clear warnings regarding alcoholic consumption, it seems as if the outlaw of games like Beer Pong is a surprise to many.

"If you are 21, you should be allowed to drink and do what you want only if you have a wet room, and what you do is your business" said junior Trissa Glasgow.
It may well be harmless fun, but like all games, there is a definite risk present. Residence Life emphasizes that drinking games do not encourage the "safe consumption of alcohol, but rather, to an excess."

As always, if one has questions, the resident assistants as well as the Residence Life office encourages students to voice their concerns. They are available to answer any questions that may arise.

On the first lab day, Lieutenant Colonel James Botters, a professor of military science, spoke of how he was happy to see so many young people volunteering for military service during war time.

"I look forward to a career in the Army," Cadet Pennington agreed.

On Friday, September 21, Saint Leo played host to an Army open house. The Army Recruiting Command, through Dade City's Recruiting Office, provided a rock wall, and a Humvee was provided by Cadet Command playing music and X-Box games. Students were able to challenge each other and the recruiters to see who could climb the rock wall the fastest. The event provided a great opportunity for students to have some fun and learn a little about the Army.

For more information about Army ROTC, go to www.saintleo.edu. On the undergraduate menu, follow the link to ROTC. Another way to contact the unit is to call (352) 588-8685. Students can also email Major Porter at kathleen.porter@saintleo.edu. Major Porter is on campus in the ROTC trailer located west of St. Edward Hall on Mondays and Tuesdays.

into their room. Even though this may be a temporary inconvenience at the time for the student, it is for their overall safety."

In order to protect especially valuable items, Helton emphasized students are welcome to use their electric engraver in the Campus Safety office to help recover stolen property.

"The student can fill out a form with the objects serial number and a short description. Then the student can assign a secret word or number to that particular item. The secret word or number will be engraved on the item and the form will be kept in our records" said Helton.

This also helps the local sheriffs' department identity stolen property from pawnshops.

"I am definitely going to make sure our door is locked," said Roderick resident, junior Christina Williams. "I remember when there were robberies in the apartments last year and how much we all freaked out about the door staying locked."

Another student, sophomore Danielle Mancuso, keeps her door locked out of habit.

"The only nights I feel the least bit insecure on campus are Thursday nights or when people are having parties. You don't really know who they invite on campus," she said. "Regardless, I always keep my door locked. It doesn't matter if I am out or inside my room; it stays locked."

When asked about her knowledge of the recent thefts on campus, Mancuso stated she had no idea thefts had occurred, but she still feels safe.

"That kind of stuff will happen anywhere, so I am not that worried about it."

Helton is not only concerned with thefts on campus, but she is also concerned with suspicious activity.

"We also encourage students to be our eyes and ears around campus," she said. "If students see anything suspicious, they can call in anonymously to Campus Safety and report it."

In the instance there is an unknown or suspicious car on campus, Campus Safety will approach the driver and ask them to fill out a Field Investigation Report or FIR. In this report, the driver must provide their name, address, driver's license number, and vehicle information.

"The FIR report is just another tool we use to keep campus safe," Helton said. "This is why the car decals are so important to our security. They help us identify whether the vehicle belongs to the student or someone who drove in from the road."

Another tactic the Campus Safety has added to its arsenal is the hiring of an extra officer five nights a week from 7:30 p.m. until 4:30 a.m.

"The reason we hired an extra officer last semester was to make sure all of our bases were covered. He currently works Tuesday through Saturday nights because those are the nights that we see the most activity on campus," Helton explained.

Much of the motivation for Campus Safety enacting new policies and locking down on crime this semester is thanks to new hire Jeff Baylor.

The assistant vice president of student services has stated his focus was to create a more "secure and sophisticated security technology on campus"

He has enacted a Campus Safety audit that is evaluating Saint Leo's current situation. It will evaluate Saint Leo's current security procedures and display their effectiveness. From this information, Baylor will be able to better predict what campus security will need in the future to become more effective.

"Since the audit began, we have provided additional training to campus safety officers, revised emergency protocols (the FIR and Lock-It or Lose-It campaign), acquired and tested the Connect-Ed emergency notification system, and hired Ken Posner as the new executive director of residence life and campus safety," said the Baylor.

Baylor has also stated the blue light emergency systems have undergone extensive refurbishment. One blue light emergency response pole is currently being added to the lakefront. The east part of campus already has a new blue light equipped with a 360-degree camera. Further plans are also in the works to add cameras to the older buildings on campus, like Roderick, where these thefts occurred.

Campus Safety has already attended seminars on how to write effective reports, perform better investigations, and how to deal with fire safety. This month, the officers will attend a CPR and ADE defibrillator seminar. Helton also attends the annual FACSSA seminars and brings one or two fellow officers with her.

With all of the new protocols, training, extra manpower, new blue lights, and cameras added to Saint Leo University, crime on campus has seen a downward trend since 2004.

According to the Your Right to Know handbook (which can be found in Trane Stop and online) burglary/ breaking and entering has gone down from 12 incidents in 2004 to 3 incidents in 2006. Even though these burglaries have occurred on campus, it is clear to see Campus Safety is ready to combat it all with an even bigger arsenal this year, perhaps the biggest Saint Leo has ever seen.

The new head of theater

BY JESSICA O'KEEFE
Lions' Pride Staff Writer

Saint Leo University welcomes English professor David McGunnis as the newly appointed head of theater.

Originally from Amarillo Texas, McGunnis graduated from the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. Before he came Saint Leo, McGunnis was the associated editor of Stage Directions magazine in Las Vegas.

McGunnis hopes to increase enrollment of English majors/theater minors. He also hopes to have a new theater built and to increase viability and visibly of the theater specialization as a whole.

What started your whole interest in theater?

Well, I have always been interested in the theater. It's been more than 20 years, and I never stopped loving it. It has become a part of me, and on some level it's been my career for the last ten years.

Why is theater important to a university?

Because it's the measurement of a university's intellectual capacity. For instance, the Romans may have conquered more than the Greeks, but the art of the Greek empire far exceeded the Romans. It is the art and the humanities that measure a culture by later generations.

How did you make cast selections for the upcoming play, The Good Doctor?

I had no idea what talent pool and crew was going to be like. Fortunately, The Good Doctor is a very flexible production, so it was the perfect play for anyone who was interested in acting.

What do you think of Saint Leo?

It's been nice here. I hate the love bugs, but besides that it's been very accepting and warm. Everyone says hello, which is completely opposite from the city I just came from.

What do you see in the future for theater?

I know that it will grow, but it's going to take some time, and a lot of work.

"The Good Doctor" will be at Saint Leo

Neil Simon's "The Good Doctor" is coming to Leo October 19 and 20. This lighthearted classical comedy is a must see. The play is short series of vignettes all based on the writing of Anton Chekhov, one of the best writers in Russian history. It has everthing: comedy, drama, and quite an amazing cast. Mark your calendars and get ready to laugh.

Fr. Stephan promises a new future for Saint Leo

BY JOSHUA M. SMITH
Lions' Pride Online Writer

The sound of clapping fills the Abbey Thursday, September 6, as the Mass of the Holy Spirit begins. Students and faculty turn their heads to find the source of the noise to see the new Director of University Ministry, Father Stephan Brown, coming down the aisle.

The clapping is contagious and fills the whole church. Fr. Stephen, in keeping with the name of the mass, keeps the Holy Spirit moving through the congregation throughout the Mass.

Fr. Stephan comes to Saint Leo from a parish in Indiana. He has been a priest for almost 15 years and also spent time doing missionary work. He became interested in working at a university in the past year and discovered Saint Leo by luck while searching the web for job openings.

"What stood out to me about Saint Leo were its core values and Benedictine traditions. I went to a Benedictine high school and loved the idea of working in that type of atmosphere" said Fr. Stephan.

"When he walked around campus with me, he made an effort to introduce himself to everyone that passed us," she said. "I felt as if I was walking in the presence of Christ because he is just full of love and acceptance."

Senior Ginger Davenport agrees. She was part of the hiring committee for the new director of university ministry.

"We (the committee) agreed we needed someone to help us be the leading Catholic university that we say we are," she said.

When the committee met Fr. Stephan, he definitely seemed like the right fit for the job.

"He applies God to everything he speaks about, and he's not afraid to do so," remarked Davenport.

Now that he is here, Fr. Stephan has some ideas for spreading Christ's love around Saint Leo. One plan is to bring prominent church leaders, such as bishops, to teach on issues including respecting life and the end of slavery (for Black History Month). Fr. Stephan also has friends in Brazil and speaks Portuguese, and he might use these tools to help organize a SERVE trip to Brazil one spring break. He is also talented in the kitchen.

"I love to cook for large groups of people. Last year I cooked four Christmas dinners for my parish. I had four turkeys and hams in the oven, my homemade macaroni and cheese and collard greens being prepared, and ribs outside on the grill all at the same time," he said. "I want to cook Thanksgiving Day dinner for anyone staying on campus this year as well. If the cafeteria is not open, then I'll have it opened and cook in there."

Students, faculty, and University Ministry warmly welcome Fr. Stephen to Saint Leo and look forward to the work he will be doing in the near future.

A Whole New World of Fun

BY ELIZABETH D'ONOFRIO
Lions' Pride Writer

"A Whole New World" is a song that most people know very well. It is a classic Disney song from the movie Aladdin, and it also happens to be the theme for this year's Fall Family Festival.

This exciting event will take place October 19-21. This event is not only for freshmen and their families, it is for the whole Saint Leo University community. Don't miss this chance for students, friends, and family to come together for a great weekend.

There will be a variety of events that will be enjoyable to everyone. Registration for the festival begins on Friday at 3 p.m. The events for Friday night include dinner; a show with comic hypnotist, Joshua Seth; and a student talent show that will recognize a number of talented students at Saint Leo. The evening will conclude with a party following the talent show.

The major events of the festival are set to take place on Saturday, October 20. There will be a volleyball game between Saint Leo and Henderson State University. The Bazaar begins at 11 a.m. and runs until 3 p.m. This includes various activities that are sponsored by the clubs and organizations on campus. Lunch will be served following the Bazaar. The next event for the day will be a volleyball game against Northwood University. The Sultan's feast will be served from 5 p.m. to 6:30 p.m.. Following the feast, there will be a women's soccer game against St. Thomas University.

The final event for Saturday is a concert featuring the band Time Warp. The band consists of seven Saint Leo professors and one student, Wesley Johnson.

"It's quite fun to play with a bunch of professors. We have a great time. Playing is just about having fun," said sophomore Wesley Johnson. "They are all really great people, and I am very glad to be able to play with them. Also, sitting on the stage and watching the reaction of the crowd as they see their faculty singing is quite an experience."

The Fall Family Festival is set to conclude on Sunday afternoon. There will be a lakefront mass in the morning, which will be followed by brunch. Saint Leo will then be providing shuttles to the Rattlesnake Festival in San Antonio for the remainder of the afternoon. Both events promise to be a great time for everyone.

BY SIMONE WILLIAMS
Lions' Pride Assistant Editor

"My mother raised six children by herself. Growing up in Fort Lauderdale, there was a mixture of some very rich people. If you didn't have a lot of money, you always felt kind of short-changed," said Outback Steakhouse owner, Timothy Gannon. And so, the story began.

Gannon visited Saint Leo University on Thursday October 4 to tell his rags-to-riches story. He was invited by the School of Business. As co-founder of Outback Steakhouse and inventor of the Bloomin' Onion, Gannon had a lot to tell. He started off, as all good stories do, with his childhood.

"Money was pretty easy, but it was about hard work," Gannon said. Working hard had always been a part of Gannon's life. He had a paper route when he was 13. And while he was in high school, he was a valet, parking cars until nearly 4 a.m. He got two hours of sleep and still went to school. Gannon did admit to sleeping from one class to the next, getting by with the help of friends.

"I remember when I left Lauderdale. I was 16-years-old and my father got me a job building swimming pools, and that was down at the bottom tying steel," Gannon said, describing a turning point in his life. After hot summers of working underneath the surface in 102 degree New Orlean heat, Gannon decided to go to college.

"Hard work is not the only part of the formula. You have to have your mind developed," Gannon said about college.

He first attended Broward Community College and then transferred to Florida State University, where he graduated with a degree in Art History. Gannon expressed a strong desire to travel the world from youth. He was in a six-month program in Florence, Italy but ended up staying for three years. He worked as a tour guide, showing American students around until his return in 1973.

When he returned, Gannon immediately went to Aspen and got a job at the Aspen Institute of Humanistic Studies. He worked with a chef who taught him how to cook in exchange for Gannon helping him with English. It was in Aspen that Gannon learned great food is made from great ingredients. Gannon's chef experience segued into a permanent career in the restaurant business.

"This was 1973 when gas lines stretched around the corner, and no one was hiring," Gannon said.

He couldn't get any other job in America, so he decided to work with Norman Brinker, owner of Steak& Ale restaurant and a good friend.

Brinker transferred him to Rockville, Maryland where he worked as a trainee for Chris Sullivan, general manager of Steak & Ale. From there, he transferred to Nashville, Tennessee and worked with George Beale. Gannon remembered a time when a gun was held to the back of his head and he was robbed. He almost dropped out of the restaurant business completely, but luckily Beale talked him back into it. From this experience, one of Gannon's personal themes is "not giving up."

Gannon also recounted meeting one of his greatest mentors, famous food consultant Warren Leruth. Beale took Gannon to Leruth's restaurant and they ate dinner with him. The evening was so memorable Gannon was able to recall all the details, like the shape of the moon and the wine they drank. They talked about food until four in the morning. It was this conversation that triggered Gannon's interest in flavor.

"I decided I wanted to learn all about flavor," Gannon said with a smile. He hired chefs in the New Orleans area to talk to him about flavor. The Bloomin' Onion, which Gannon is most notably known for, blossomed from a Japanese cookbook.

"They [Japanese] make their food so beautiful, but you can't bring that kind of food into the market. I wanted to make that pretty food edible," Gannon said. He combined his deep knowledge of flavors with the aesthetics of the Japanese, and that Bloomin' Onion was born. It's made with 18 different spices and 46 different ingredients. The onion was just the start.

In 1987, Gannon joined Bob Basham and Sullivan in Tampa when Outback Steakhouse was just a thought. He joked about how he had to sell his saddle to make it there, arriving with only $37 in his pocket. He lived with Basham six months until he could afford to live on his own.

The trio worked with the steakhouse idea, straying away from the boring and bringing in "bold flavors." They opened the first Outback Steakhouse on March 15, 1988, and now Gannon looks forward to celebrating their 20th anniversary. He recalled having to call friends to come in when the restaurant first started and is proud now that people wait in line three hours for a seat.

The story ended with Gannon celebrating the fact Outback Steakhouse had gone private. Visitors were given raffle tickets at the beginning of the presentation. Gannon picked a few tickets out of a bowl, and the lucky winners got free Outback Steakhouse dinners.

The presentation was taped and can be found online at http://iteach.saintleo.edu under the School of Business.

Q&A With Tim Gannon

BY SIMONE WILLIAMS
Lions' Pride Assistant Editor

Q: What's your greatest sacrifice?

A: It's moving to new cities where you don't know anybody. Like when I moved to Nashville and I got robbed. Being in those tough situations where you have no family, no friends, and not knowing anybody, that's where you start questioning yourself. That's where you grow the most, also. Find something to focus on. Mind was flavor. Have a skill that's worth equity. I knew bold flavors were going to work.

Q: Do you ever worry about quality?

A: The two things I'm most proud of is that I hear all the time, where ever I go and which ever Outback, that "it always tastes great" and "it always tastes the same." That consistency and quality is part of our five principles of Hospitality at Outback. A way to keep good quality is to have control. I have control because I buy all our ingredients.

Q: What motivated you?

A: It was never really about the money. My goal was to be successful. I cared about the restaurants being full and about the people waiting in line. It was that I knew personally that I did something, that I could look out and see people lining up to get there [Outback]. The nightmare is to have a restaurant and have nobody come in. That's scary. The drive for success is most important. If you're successful, then you're happy.

Slither on over to San Antonio's rattlesnake festival

BY BRANDY SCAGLIONE
Lions' Pride Photographer

It's yet another weekend in Leo Land. Besides laundry, cleaning, and homework, there's nothing much to do. Well, if it's the weekend of October 20, there is a whole bunch to do!

Once again, San Antonio's 41 Rattlesnake Festival has come around.

This event takes place in the San Antonio City Park on October 20 from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. and also on October 21 from 11 a.m. - 4 p.m.

Admission, parking, and shuttle rides are all free. The craft fair and children's games alone make this event affordable and worth the drive.

There will also be educational wildlife exhibits, a petting zoo, pony rides, an arts and crafts fair, and live bands. For a few dollars, there is the John Storm's Reptile Show, a must see for all reptile lovers.

For the competitive student, there are many races and contests to enter. There is the Five Mile Rattlesnake Run on Saturday beginning at 8 a.m. For the turtle owners, they can enter their pets in the Gopher Tortoise Race for a dollar. There is also a western wear contest.

For car enthusiasts, come Sunday for the classic car show or Saturday for the 4x4 truck show.

Another reason to stop by is for the food. Almost every restaurant in the Dade City area will have a booth. Among the food available, there will be world famous BBQ chicken and beef on Saturday and fish dinners on Sunday. Pancake breakfasts will also be available on both Saturday and Sunday mornings.

There is something for everyone at this fair. It beats being stuck on campus with nothing to do. San Antonio Park is just a little ways from Saint Leo University. Go and get some food, watch a few bands, and learn something new about the local culture.

Resident Evil: Extinction Distinction

BY THOMAS SCAGLIONE III
Lions' Pride Staff Writer

Ladies, have you ever wondered what it would be like to slip into a revealing red dress, strap up some impractically stylish boots, and have quality time with a man that's actually interested in you for your brains?

Guys, can you imagine a woman whose actually more turned on by ear-deafening explosions, high-speed motorcycles, and punch-throwing action than you are? If so, then you are in luck!

In Resident Evil: Extinction, we are reunited with Alice on her mission to save the world, or what's left of it, from the sinister Umbrella Corporation. In its primitive efforts to create the perfect biological weapon in 2002's Resident Evil and 2004's Resident Evil: Apocalypse, Umbrella's zombie-turning T-Virus has now infected life outside of Raccoon City.

The world, barren of nearly all life, is now home for thousands of the ever-increasing army of the undead. The human race's only hope rests in the genetically mutated genes of Alice, and her friends who have been forced to live nomadic lifestyles in the deserts of Nevada.

The Fifth Element's (1997) Milla Jovovich, The Mummy's (1999) Oded Fehr, and Lara Croft: Tomb Raider's (2001) Iain Glen return and are joined by newcomers Ashanti and Heroes' (2006) Ali Larter to complete this all-star cast of the game-based trilogy.

This movie from start to finish is extremely captivating in its fast-paced action sequences and its wide range of special effects. This movie is sure to give any die-hard gamer or horror fan both chills and thrills. However, this movie will probably confuse those who have not seen the first two movies of the series and will probably offend anyone who is against gore, nudity, and violence, but that should be fairly obvious considering its not called Attack of the Huggable Teddy Bears.

Released into theatres on September 21, 2007, Resident Evil is rated R and runs about 95 minutes. The DVD release date has not been announced, but hard-core fans can purchase the soundtrack to hold them over, which features bands Aiden, Flyleaf, and Shadows Fall to name a few.

Major shake-ups occur for several TV programs

BY MICHEAL DOWDAL
Lions' Pride Staff Writer

The Tonight Show has been a long-running staple of late night television since 1954. However, in 2009, the show will change hosts for the first time in 17 years, with Jay Leno retiring his position as host.

For those who remember, there was a bitter competition for that spot between David Letterman and Jay Leno, when the late Johnny Carson stepped down as host of the show.

The decision led an embittered David Letterman to leave NBC for rival CBS. As a result, his show (Late Night with David Letterman) was left host-less. Conan O'Brien was selected as his permanent replacement and has hosted Late Night ever since. Jay Leno has announced that O'Brien will replace him on the Tonight Show, making the circle complete.

As for O'Brien's own show, NBC has been looking at a number of candidates to replace the long-standing host.

"I really don't see who could replace Conan O'Brien. I think he's one of the funniest men on television," said Stephanie Turner, a freshman.

The number one candidate at the moment, however, seems to be Saturday Night Live alumni Jimmy Fallon.

"[Fallon] is at the top of our short list," said Rick Ludwin, the head of Late-night Broadcasting for NBC.

On daytime talk show The View, the cast has been constantly revolving for years. This season's premiere saw the debut of new cohost Whoopi Goldberg.

Goldberg, an Oscar-award winning actress, has proven to be a fitting addition to the cast since her first appearance. The other new castmate was Sherri Shepard, making this season the first ever in 11 years that two African-Americans cohosted together.

The other major shake-up is The Price is Right, a long running TV game show. Bob Barker, now 83 years old, hosted the show for 35 years, but has retired after last season and will be replaced in the upcoming season by comedian Drew Carrey.

Carrey is well known for his own TV show, as well as a host of game shows The Power of 10 and Whose Line is it Anyway?. Carrey's premiere episode will air Oct. 15.

Saint Leo University's book club uncovered

BY WESLEY JOHNSON
Lions' Pride Staff Writer

In this modern age of video gaming and text messaging, it's not hard to believe most students rarely see reading a book as fun or as a recreational activity.

While society has yet to reach a position quite like Ray Bradbury's Fahrenheit 451, the notion that reading cannot be for fun is on the tips of some people's tongues. As the national literacy rate drops, those people tend to be students. But wait; there is still hope for the literate and for those who want to explore the tales that reading illuminates.

A book club is basically a group of people who individually read a book. Then, they meet and discuss what they've read, bringing their different experiences and thoughts to the discussion. While this seems like a pretty simple concept, the rewards of participating in such a group are far greater than just plot discussion.

Dr. Kathryn Duncan oversees the Saint Leo book club; she orchestrates the meeting times and is the person who gets refreshments for the session. At the last meeting, scheduled about lunch time, she bought pizza. In the past, she has brought everything from cookies to bagels.

However, she doesn't run the meetings; she leaves that to the students.

"They've always picked the books. In the past we've read titles like Midnight in the Garden of Good and Evil, Breakfast at Tiffany's, and The Kite Runner," Duncan noted. The club is currently reading The Namesake.

In a recent interview with Duncan, she gave the details of the book club's layout and purpose.

How often does the book club meet?

"We read a book each break and usually one during the semester. About four times during the year."

Who can join the book club? Is it limited to just English majors? Are any other teachers involved?

"Membership is for students only. We encourage students outside the English department to join, and in the past we've had students from departments like business. So, it's not just the English majors."

What is the ultimate goal for having the book club?

"The obvious goal of the club is to help students become more proficient readers. But, I want students to read for fun, and I want them to see reading isn't always the dry task they might be used to. Students read a lot in school, but it's hardly considered recreational. Ultimately, I'd like students to understand what life is like in different cultures, and I want them to feel a connection with people outside of their lives."

How has the book club been spread around campus?

"When I first started it, I tried advertising. But that didn't seem to work. So right now, it's spread through word of mouth. And hopefully, this article will help."

BY MICHEAL DOWDAL
Lions' Pride Staff Writer

The Recording Industry Association of America (or RIAA) is a music pirate's worst nightmare.

According to the Electronic Frontier Foundation (EFF), more than 20,000 people have been sued by the RIAA for copyright infringement due to illegally obtaining music through peer-to-peer (P2P) networks.

This year, the RIAA has already sent out 403 "Pre-Lawsuit" letters to 22 schools across the US, informing them of users who have been illegally downloading music. These letters provide an option for schools to settle with the RIAA and for the offending students to pay a settlement to the group at a discounted price.

"I really think it's ridiculous how much trouble you can get into for downloading a few songs. Where's the harm?" said junior Keith Williams.

The RIAA has drawn considerable controversy with its approach to pirating, as they have gone to great lengths to litigate and locate the perpetrators of illegal downloading. One such example is a case the RIAA attempted to bring against Russian site AllofMp3.com, which is now defunct; the case was thrown out as the RIAA had no jurisdiction over a Russian website.

Many cases where the RIAA has attempted to bring litigation to users by their Internet addresses have resulted in several cases of mistaken identity, such as the RIAA trying to contact 12-year-olds and deceased people, according to the EFF. There have been several accusations made regarding the RIAA's actions, labeling them "bullies" and "harassers."

"Students who illegally download are at a large risk because school computer networks do not provide the security or anonymity to users that other networks allow," a news release sent out by the RIAA stated.

This is the prime reasoning, other than protecting the intellectual properties of musicians, for the RIAA's strict campaign. Students are advised to not take the risk in paying thousands of dollars in damages instead of shelling out a few dollars here and there to get their favorite music.

"I really don't think downloading music is worth it; after all, getting in trouble with school is a lot worse than having to spend a few dollars on a CD," said Jane Simpson, a freshman.

Another result of these letters is the problems the schools face in having to account for these thousands of dollars in damages. It has been stated by the RIAA that students accounted for more than 1.3 billion illegal downloads in the year 2006 alone.

"According to non-profit research group Institute for Policy Innovation, global theft of sound recordings cost the US economy $12.5 billion in lost revenue and more than 71,000 jobs and $2 billion in wages to US workers," said an RIAA spokesperson in the recent press release.

Any student served with one of these prelitigation letters is encouraged by the RIAA to settle at a discounted rate before a lawsuit is filed at the website www.p2plawsuits.com.

Several challenges of the legality of said lawsuits have occurred. But in most cases, the accused settles without challenging. The EFF, as well as PublicKnowledge (a non-profit lobbying group), argue the RIAA's aggressive campaign impedes on Fair Use and the personal rights of those who are accused of copyright infringement. The debate still wages on, in and out of the courtroom, with the two opposing schools of thoughts and their constituents squaring off in different forums and media.

Regardless of one's stance on the legality of downloading music, it is a great danger to one's self and one's school to continue doing so while the RIAA continues its attempts to shut down illegal peer-to-peer networks and file-sharing for good.

A conscious student should shy away from these downloads until the situation is settled and a decision has been reached.

Bug zapped

BY CAITLIN CRAFT
Lions' Pride Sports Editor

Ashley Judd is back without Morgan Freeman. She is taking part in what seems like a small town, low budget film.

Bug is the story of a lonely waitress getting tips and tipsy from lesbian customers. Agnes, played by Ashley Judd, is living a small town, country life in a busted up hotel room that will soon be infested with drama.

The story begins and ends with Agnes in fear for the well-being of her life. Her recently paroled, abusive husband is on the loose and looking to get back in touch with Agnes.

When he finally does, an ex-war veteran, Peter Evans, played by Michael Shannon, is there to nurse her wounds and her broken heart.

However, as the two grow closer, they notice the number of bug bites growing on them. At first it's two or three and then five or six. Then their eccentric, hopeful romance makes a turn to survival from the evil aphides.

With the plot jumping from conspiracy to suspicion to a room covered in aluminum foil in order to scramble the signal, this mix of jumbled thoughts and ideas makes it hard to find more than a sexual relation between characters.

The lonely Oklahoma hotel room becomes the only sense of safety these two characters possess, until the outside environment begins to agitate Peter, making Agnes begin to believe in this plot to kill both of them by infesting them with bugs.

Director William Friedkin has taken this story line to the complete extreme. Comparing this to his past works, such as The Hunted and Rules of Engagement, it seems as though he wanted the audience to figure things out with a small amount of information.

This rated R movie, for strong violence, sexuality, nudity, drug and alcohol use, runs for a brain wrecking hour and 42 minutes. This movie is recommended as long as the mind is open to the psychotic methods of mind manipulation.

The broad set of elements the director provides is enough to entertain; however, it may require more than one night in the DVD player.

USF transfer baseball player to make impact

BY JEN DUFFEY
Lions' Pride Staff Writer

Brandin Daniel is a junior academically, but a senior athletically, having played the past three seasons at the University of South Florida. Brandin transferred from USF to Saint Leo and will play baseball for the Lions in the spring. His decision to transfer was a personal one, but he chose Saint Leo because it's close to home, his family can come watch him, and there are great coaches.

Daniel was born in Miami, Florida and has called Punta Gorda home for his entire life. He has been playing baseball from the time he was four years old hitting off a tee until now, giving him eighteen years of experience playing a game he loves.

While he played other sports in high school such as football, basketball, and soccer, baseball is the one that appealed to him most and made him want to pursue it in college. And pursue it he did. Now, Daniel does little besides playing baseball, but he's not complaining.

When asked what he likes to do besides playing baseball, "sleep," he said with a big smile. With a little more thought he added that he also likes to play poker. Still, Brandin is a person who lives and breaths baseball. He hopes to be a baseball coach after his playing days are over. "If I lost baseball I don't know what the heck I would do," Daniel added.

With such determination, Daniel looks to be a great addition to the baseball team. When asked what he thought he could bring to the team, his answer wasn't a big bat or a great glove, but something that shows there is more to baseball or any sport than just the physical action of playing. Simply, he's a character.

"I'm a goofball," he said, adding that he tries to make things less stressful.

One may wonder if stress has been a problem for this 22 year old transfer from a big state school to tiny Saint Leo. Even with 36 other men on the team, Daniel reports he has had no problems fitting in with the team.

Looking ahead to the season, Daniel hopes to help Saint Leo win and hopefully reach the World Series. He, along with the rest of the team, have been conditioning since they returned to Saint Leo. With practices starting up October 8, the boys will be ready to take on the competition come spring time, and Daniel hopes all the students will come out to support the baseball team.

Young, athletic team builds for future conference wins

CAITLIN CRAFT
Lions' Pride Sports Editor

Saint Leo women's volleyball came into season with a great ambition. Their ambition shone brightly during their opening tournaments, winning 13 out of 16 games; however, their light has struggled to stay lit now that their conference games have begun.

Head coach Samuel Cibrone has shown great faith in his team, but is very aware of the complexity of the conference in association with the team's record so far.

"This is the toughest the conference has ever been. All nine teams have the potential to beat each other. Any team can be beaten at any time, which makes for a competitive year," said Cibrone.

In the past the team has always had a few teams that were not as competitive, but that does not seem to be the case this year. For instance, after a number of games away from home, the team battled against long time rival Florida Southern College (FSC). In their past 59 meetings, Saint Leo has never conquered FSC, and they did not manage to obtain victory during this first season meeting. FSC had a quick three and out win over the Lions. However, the Lions will have another chance on October 17.

"I gave a strong pep talk, and we went over our game plan twice. Unfortunately, we did not execute our plan. We will get them next time," said Cibrone.

For the past few years, Cibrone has led the lady Lions through some impressive seasons. Their full record in the past three years was 48-48, as of the FSC game. Their record this year so far is 15-7 overall and 1-4 in the Sunshine State Conference (SSC). Cibrone's team structure this year is fairly young. It's almost as if Saint Leo is having a building year. Cibrone is starting three freshman and two sophomores.

"I have recruited four solid freshman and one transfer student, so we are a younger, less experienced team, but we are very athletic," said Cibrone.

Cibrone has NCAA tournament plans for this year and next for his team. With a variety of students and talent, the team is bound to find consistent chemistry.

"I hope to be fighting for a national championship next year or the year after," said Cibrone.

Their latest conference fall came last week against the University of Tampa. Regardless of their loss, the team seemed to play well and consistent, but with UT being number one in the nation the Lions were unble to defeat the Spartans on their home court. They lost another three and out. The Lions did seem to keep up with the Spartans. At some instances during the match they had complete control of the game, with point gaps as big as 10.

"We played well," said Chelsea Armer. "But, you really can't do much against the number one team in the country."

With a loss against Eckerd College a few days before, the team strives to raise their conference record in hopes of making it to the tournament in order to redeem their glory.

"I try to get their minds off the past and think about the moment," said Cibrone.

Fans agree with Cibrone. To see their school's team struggle with small mistakes is heart wrenching. Students who attend the games give their biggest cheers and loudest grievances in hopes the Lions will pull it together to make for an exciting comeback during the back half of the season.
